

Essential business infrastructure continuity statement

January 13, 2021

To whom it may concern,

Alfa Laval is continuously tracking the rapidly developing Coronavirus situation, and we're complying with Federal, Provincial and Local regulations. Our priorities are the health and safety of our employees, as well as maintaining the continuity of our business.

Different Provinces and localities have begun to issue orders limiting the activities of businesses and individuals. These orders and guidelines vary from Province to Province. Those that have ordered shutdowns, generally provide that businesses are not allowed to open their physical locations unless they are in a business that is identified as "essential", "critical infrastructure", "life sustaining" or some similar term, or are a supplier or vendor to businesses that fit within one of these categories.

Alfa Laval's operations are "essential", "critical infrastructure" or "life sustaining" as defined in the applicable Provincial and Federal guidelines. Alfa Laval is a manufacturer, supplier and servicer of equipment for essential critical infrastructure industries, including the energy sector, food and agriculture, water and wastewater, public works, communications and information technology, defense and healthcare/public health. As such, Alfa Laval and its employees are considered essential for the purpose of continuing to operate certain of our physical work locations. This means that our employees are permitted to leave their residences for the purposes of going to work and returning home.

Alfa Laval has required all employees who can work from home to do so, and we've adjusted our operations so that only essential personnel are present at our sites. For our operations that remain open and where working from home is not feasible, we are following Alfa Laval Corporate, Federal and Provincial Health Authority guidance to keep our employees safe, while continuing to meet the needs of our customers.
